VISITING NURSE

become infected and maybe others outside the family. This shows the dangers from the disease.

She strongly advised that Hillsboro have a permanent visiting nurse. This, she said, would cost about $1200 a year. The work done by this nurse would be of a charitable and semi-charitable nature and in giving advice to everyone whether able to pay or not in regard to the care and precautions to be taken with the sick, where a nurse was not needed all the time. She said that while everyone had taken most kindly to her suggestions and seemed to be carrying them out that she was afraid that when she was gone, if no one continued to call their attention to the necessity of doing these things they would fall back into the old dangerous conditions; also that there would always be new cases where attention and instructions would be needed. She said that the nurse could also inspect the school buildings and examine the defective children. To raise this money she suggested voluntary contributions and said that if 1200 people would each give $1 how easy it would be.

She spoke of a Public Health Exhibit by the State Board of Health, which would be given here soon, under the direction of the Home and School Association. This, she stated, was a most interesting and instructive exhibit and should be visited by everyone. Further and more detailed announcements will be given of it later.

In concluding Miss McNamara said that she wanted to thank the physicians of Hillsboro and the members of the Home and School Association for their kindness and the assistance rendered her in the work. She said the physicians and the women could not have been more thoughtful and considerate and given her heartier cooperation.

Anecdotes of Agassiz.

The son of Louis Agassiz, who has just written a book about his distinguished father, has some good stories to tell of the elder man's courage and temper. During his first return to Germany he had occasion to resent the behavior of a restaurant waiter who was neglecting everyone else in favor of some army officers who were seated at another table. One of the officers defended the waiter. "Agassiz remarked that he was not speaking to him; the officer handed Agassiz his card; the latter tore it up; the officer started to draw his sword, but before he could get it out of the scabbard Agassiz knocked him down with a chair." Another story relates to the life of the great scientist in America. A few years before his death he came into his house in Cambridge delighted with an occurrence he had just seen in Boston. An automobile pushing through the crowd had knocked down a woman. Her escort proceeded to pummel the chauffeur. "But why," asked the listener, "didn't the owner come to his chauffeur's assistance?" "Oh," exclaimed Agassiz, "I was holding him."

Hell Gate Steel Bridge.

Hell Gate bridge, which is now being constructed across East river, New York, as a link to connect New England with the west and south, will contain the longest steel arch span ever built. The bridge is a part of the New York connecting railroad, built by the New Haven and the Pennsylvania system, to carry traffic from north of Harlem river to Long Island and to relieve the Grand Central station. The road will have four tracks, will be ten miles long and will cost $30,000,000. About 15,800 feet of it will be carried on bridges and viaducts from 20 to 135 feet above the ground. A magnificent view of the Hell Gate bridge is a feature of the November Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Look to Workingmen's Health.

Because the vitiated air is bad for the workingman, the German government has forbidden the drying of plaster in new buildings by the use of open stoves. The stoves must now be connected by pipes with the outside.
